years, Mr. Mundra understood why selling his gun was actually a blessing. While telling this to author, he narrated another incident, wherein he told that during the peak militancy period in Punjab, one night four armed men with pistols broke into his bedroom.

Using his decades of police experience, Mr. Mundra stayed completely calm. The intruders said they respected his good reputation and did not want to hurt him, but they demanded his personal weapon.

At this, with utmost humility, Mr. Mundra explained them, "I do not have any weapon anymore. While fellow villagers knew I owned one at retirement, I had to sell it years ago just to build the house you are standing in right now."

To ease their suspicion, my grandmother, Smt. Saraswati Devi Mundra, followed her husband's instructions and handed them the entire ring of keys, telling them to search every lock if they want. Deeply impressed by this innocent, calm, and confident response, the intruders believed the honest words. They left everything untouched and quietly disappeared into the night.

While sharing this incident with the author, Mr. Mundra smiled warmly and said: "Whatever is destined, is destined for the best." He further explained that the loss he had mourned for years had ultimately spared their lives and kept a lethal weapon out of dangerous hands.
